Course Description
This course studies contemporary and historical artists in relation to today's environmental crisis. The course examines how art objects and art making relate to issues pertaining to nature, ecology, and the environment. Through visual and textual analysis, the course provides interdisciplinary perspectives on art's place within contemporary post humanist theories, the significance of ecological thinking to contemporary aesthetics, art's historical response to the impact of science and technology, and art's recognition of the importance of Indigenous knowledge to planetary ethics.
