Course Description

What impact does war have on different groups of people, such as refugees or war correspondents? How have societies altered the conduct of war, through the persecution of minorities, for example? This course addresses these questions, exploring the dynamic relationship between culture, conflict, and change to fully explore people at war. Through both a thematic and case study approach, it draws on a wide range of historic and contemporary conflicts to investigate the destructive and transformative power of conflict on social, cultural, and political life.
