Course Description
This course provides a general introduction to the history, the structure, and the current developments of the European Union, with a specific focus on France. The course begins with a historical examination of the reasons that led to the creation of the union, then turns to its evolution over the years, and finally looks at the recent events and discusses what lies ahead in the future for the European Union. The course examines topics including the history, structure, and current developments of the European Union, as well as its institutions and functionaries with a specific focus on France; theoretical tools to analyze complex issues and institutions involved in European integration from its inception to its present day configuration and role in world affairs; European construction within the existing theories of integration; how belligerent countries came to end their discord and form a union; and the workings of this institution on a day-to-day basis and its importance as an economic and political actor in Europe and the world.
