Course Description
The course explores the relationships between development and the environment: the consequences of development on the environment, environmental constraints to development, and problems of development in marginal environments. The course also examines how the environment and issues around sustainability have been considered (or ignored) in relation to development and how this has changed over time. The course includes historical perspectives on environment and development, illustrating continuities and changes in policies related to environment and development. It also explores core issues around environmental management and development in relation to key resources, such as wildlife, forests, and water.
