Course Description
This course explores a number of areas of Islamic thought in the contemporary world. The course covers the development of theories, philosophies, and debates shaping and influencing reformist movements, cultural transformations, and the Muslim way of life. The course places an emphasis on primary texts where major thinkers grapple with the existential matters of change and continuity, such as liberalization, politics and democratization, human rights, and women rights. The course explores some "fiqh" responses to challenges posed by modern applications of science and technology in the fields of ecology and biomedical ethics.
