Course Description
This course examines the development of speech perception and speech production during first language acquisition. In speech perception, it reviews experimental methods used for testing speech perception in infants and older children, theoretical models of speech perception development, experimental findings regarding speech perception development in the first year of life, experimental findings regarding later development, and atypical development in children with hearing loss and with SLI. In speech production, it reviews techniques for eliciting speech data in children, models of speech production development, experimental findings of speech production studies in children, and issues of individual variability in speech production in children.
