Course Description
This course focuses on the legal grounds of the environmental protection (constitutional law, international law, European law, national legal orders), in order to ask if there is a fundamental right to a healthy environment. The main environmental principles are studied (precautionary principle, polluter-pays principle, the access principles), along with the main environmental challenges (protecting biodiversity, protecting spaces, climate change). The approach is comparative and includes the participation of each student to explain the environmental policy of his/her own country.
