Course Description
This course examines the field of international relations. It assumes both a theoretical and empirical approach, and is being organized around three core themes: international relations theory; history, in our case, the Cold War; and post-Cold War power issues in international affairs. Theories discussed include realism, liberalism, Marxism and critical theory, and post-structuralism. Cold War topics include from containment to division; from division to deterrence; from deterrence to collapse. Other topics include peace and security and religion and identity.
