Course Description
This course considers the concepts of crime and deviance, as well as social control alongside the exploration of the sociological explanations for the existence of crime and deviance in society. The module critically examines the data sources used to support these perspectives, which are applied to the study of institutions of social control such as the police, the courts, and prisons. Students examine the distribution of crime, the use of official statistics to track crime, the mass media, juvenile delinquency, mental illness, and sexuality.
