Course Description

This course provides a study of English-language poetry, ideas, culture and literature created between 1730 and 1900. It provides a critical examination of the cultural, historical, and sociopolitical framework of literary and poetic works (Romanticism, the French Revolution and the British Empire) applying critical trends found within current literary theory, such as cultural materialism, new historicism, postcolonial criticism, feminism, gay and lesbian theory, and psychoanalysis. Topics covered include: nature and the rural world; rebel and subversive authors; revolutions, wars, and nationalism; Romanticism; the British Empire and the Victorian era.
