Course Description
Digital media saturates everyday life, re-organizes cultural productions of all kinds, and re-mediates the teaching and learning environments which students inhabit at Sussex. The course examines this digital environment through both practical and theoretical perspectives. Students learn to understand and use digital tools to enhance and explore their study and to take a critically informed stance on their existing practices. Students examine developments in new media with a particular emphasis on different uses of digital media, enabling students to make distinctions between kinds of material, genres and platforms.
