Course Description
Guerrilla warfare and counterinsurgency are now among the most dominant forms of conflict throughout the world (Syria, Libya, Afghanistan, Ukraine, etc.) It is therefore prudent to have some basic knowledge about the specifics of these strategies and modes of fighting in order to understand the global dynamics of warfare in the twenty-first century. This course draws on a multidisciplinary approach combining history, strategic studies and political philosophy. It follows a series of case studies in a chronological order from the Second World War to this day. It puts an emphasis on the study of primary sources, whether practical (archives, reports) or theoretical (essays, doctrines). Prerequisite for this course includes a basic knowledge of twentieth century international history and an active interest in world affairs.
