Course Description

This course provides an overview of the international tax system, focusing on the main elements that characterize direct and indirect taxes, and how these may interact. It analyses the importance of bilateral relations between countries and problems that may arise, such as the effects of double taxation, customs duties, and other tax figures. It examines the framework of double taxation, and both internal and external measures that exist to prevent or mitigate it. The course also examines various tax rules and regulations from an international perspective, specifically analyzing the differences between fix, proportional, and progressive taxes.
