Course Description

Why do countries trade? Why do they create trade-promoting institutions? Which citizens support or oppose international trade? And how international politics affects international trade and vice versa? The course provides theoretical and empirical underpinnings to answer these questions. Upon successfully completing the course, students can understand various contemporary issues of international politics of trade in an informed manner, including trade conflicts between South Korea and Japan and between the US and China. Textbook: Thomas Oatley, INTERNATIONAL POLITICAL ECONOMY.
