Course Description
This course uses microeconomic concepts and tools to explain effects of various public policies. The course has four broad themes: the economic rationale for government intervention in the economy; the evaluation of what types of intervention are most appropriate; the winners and losers from government intervention; and if the benefits of intervention exceed the costs. Areas of application include: the environment (clean energy subsidy); trade (export subsidy); competition (merger); health (banning junk food); intellectual property (internet piracy); education (tuition hike); and regulation of markets. Text: James Brander, GOVERNMENT POLICY TOWARDS BUSINESS. Assessment: attendance and participation (10%), assignments (40%), midterm exam (50%).
