Course Description
The course provides an overview of the most relevant components of development studies from a gender perspective. It includes activities by international organizations, NGOs, civil society organizations, and grassroots movements. The course includes several disciplinary and interdisciplinary approaches (law, gender studies, anthropology, politics, economics) and analyzes international legal instruments, tools and specific cases, as well as their implementation at regional and national level. A diverse set of themes are treated: gender sensitive project planning, use of legal instrument as an advocacy tool, women's rights in different areas of development (land, water, food security, food sovereignty, education, health). Students are involved in seminar and practice exercises.
