Course Description
This course provides an introduction to the main areas of Linguistics and language study. It covers phonetics (the sounds used in human languages), phonology (the analysis of how sounds are organized in specific languages), morphology (how words are structured in languages), syntax (how phrases and sentences are made in languages), semantics (the study of meaning in words and phrases), and pragmatics (how meaning can be altered in context). It also provides an analysis of current theories of language acquisition.
