Course Description
Since the onset of the financial crisis in 2008, global finance was pushed to the fore of the political agenda. The course surveys the transformations underpinning the rise of global finance from the point of view of political science. The course is divided in three parts. The first part observes the historic transformations of the financial sphere. The second part addresses various characteristics of the modern financial market: the role of ideas, banking practices as well as the role of regulators and central banks. Finally, the third part looks at financial crises and regulative reforms. Topics covered include: the Gold Standard; the Bretton Woods system; deregulation and capital control; financialization and the rise of global finance; the role of economic ideas; banking practices; credit agencies; regulation and regulators ; general theory of crises; the 1998 East-Asian Financial crisis; the 2008 Global Financial crisis; post-crisis regulation; finance and society.
