Course Description
The course offers a practical analysis of the role of accountability and transparency for the stability of post-conflict transitions and reconstructions. The observations from field researchers are analyzed in this course as one of the few elements that give tangible measurements of the corruption that occurs in post-conflict settings. Students contribute to the content of the course in several sessions and are asked to generate a model to conceptualize the notion of accountability and transparency. Both practical experiences from the field and theoretic approaches are used to structure the class. This course provides students with the opportunity to obtain experience in creating and refining policy.
