Course Description
This course discusses the conflicts and settlement patterns in the sub-region of Southern Africa in the first quarter of the 19th century. The course deals with the historiography of the conflicts surrounding the settlement patterns of the Southern African sub-region and the debates emanating thereof. Through a variety of interpretations, arguments, and analyses available in the specified literature, students read and internalize the different perspectives of debates, analyze and critique what they have read, and form their own independent opinion on the subject. The course discusses topics including an overview of the history of settlement patterns and their associated conflicts in Southern African societies; why different societies and their cultures are where they are presently; and the historiography surrounding the debates about conflicts and settlement patterns of Southern Africa.
