Course Description
The course examines the socio-economic and political change associated with European expansion and colonialism. It takes a historical perspective to introduce features of global political economy, past and present, including processes of production and appropriation, inequalities, social justice, and social change in the making of the Global South. The course is based on the premise that colonialism had profound effects on the formation of both the Global North and the Global South and that this historical knowledge is necessary to understand global processes today.
