Course Description

This practical and theoretical course explores debates about the value of creative arts in engaging with aspects of Scottish history. Focusing on recent theoretical perspectives on 'multiple relations with the past', the course involve students making creative outputs on an aspect of Scottish history (either individually or in groups) and reflecting on their own practice. The course is co-taught by staff from the School of Culture and Creative Arts and the School of Humanities, thereby seeking to develop new ways of learning and teaching through an interdisciplinary approach.
