Course Description
This course provides an overview of languages in Ghana, within the context of the West African sub-region. It aims to give students a working knowledge of the genetic and typological groupings of languages spoken in Ghana. Issues of language development, language in development, and national language policy will also be examined. The course will also guide students to understand and appreciate the linguistic definition of language, the language situation of Ghana today, the functional allocation and co-existence of languages in Ghana, and issues of how language and society influence each other in the Ghanaian multilingual context.
