Course Description
This course examines the link between journalism and social change since the emergence of the mass media, with a special focus on the 19th century to present . It explores the influence of journalism on historical evolution, both in the sense of change or in maintaining the established order. This course discusses the role of the media and information during WWI, WWII, the Cold War, processes of de-colonization, and the post-Cold War world. NOTE: This course is the same as COMM 111, but taught in English.
