Course Description

This course examines contemporary approaches to the past through a critical examination of current literature, case studies – mainly British, European, and imperial/colonial – and fieldwork excursions in and around London. History and Memory I and II are designed to explore the complex relationships between past and present, promote an understanding of the nature of history as a discipline, and investigate the social and public functions of historical research. The emphasis is on the often controversial relationship between professional historians and other groups with an interest in the past: politicians and states, cultural institutions, the media, and the general public.
