Course Description
This course takes the recording and sound processing skills already introduced to students in Sound Recording and develops these further, within a studio context, to creative ends. In this course, new concepts in sound and music creation are introduced to encourage independent and innovative usage of music technology in compositions. Utilizing both analog and digital methods, students learn new electronic musical instrument integration methods and ways of integrating traditional instruments and sampling. These include the use of laptops, as well as hardware instruments. Tutorials help develop these methods and prepare students for their practical works and report.
