Course Description
The European Neighborhood Policy (ENP) originated with a view to safeguard the EU's security and strategic interests and to promote its values amongst its neighbors. It aimed to develop a “ring of friends” around the EU's borders. Instead, it seems that EU's neighborhood has become “a ring of fire” due to emerging geopolitical, security, economic, and social challenges. This course has a twofold objective. The primary aim is to introduce students to the legal and institutional aspects of the EU's international relations through the study of the European Neighborhood Policy (ENP). The additional aim is to provide them with the analytical tools necessary to critically assess how the Union frames and implements its policies among its neighbors. The course is developed along three thematic modules. First, it addresses the specificities of the legal framework governing the EU's international relations. Secondly, the ENP is examined in light of its objectives, instruments, and methodology. Thirdly, specific case studies serve as a basis to explore the ENP's bilateral, regional, and sectoral dimensions. At the end of this course, students are able to situate ENP-related external relations law material in its political, economic, and historical context.
