Course Description

This course considers development processes in the light of how they are shaped by and impact gender discourses and relations. The course covers key concepts in the analysis of social relations between women and men in different cultural, economic and political contexts. This includes examining the nature of gender inequality and of the household as a social construct, and reviewing concepts of power and empowerment. While concerned with providing a theoretical and conceptual grounding by reviewing debates on the household and the gender division of labor, the course is organized around substantive and policy topics related to poverty, labor markets, women's employment, migration, and globalization..
