Course Description
This course discusses human rights from a multidisciplinary perspective and in relation to nutrition related issues. In this course, illustrative examples from selected countries and case studies play a crucial role in students' acquisition of knowledge and understanding of human rights concepts. The course contributes a fundamental understanding of the relationship between food, nutrition, and human rights; provides students with the knowledge, abilities, and motivation to strengthen, design and implement programs and interventions using a human rights-based approach; and contributes to an interdisciplinary dialogue on the right to food. Students analyze situations related to hunger and malnutrition on the basis of a fundamental understanding of human rights and the right to food in particular. They also design human rights-based policies, programs, and interventions directed at food and nutrition security, and form research questions focusing on human rights related issues. The course covers international human rights law with regard to the right to food in particular and provides insight into changing roles and practices of state and non-state actors in a globalizing world.
