Course Description
The course builds on Ethnographic Research Methods and introduces students to the practical and methodological aspects of ethnographic research. The course teaches students to design and conduct an independent ethnographic research project around a key anthropological theme, allowing them to reflect on and apply the theoretical and practical insights gained in the course of their degree. Students are guided and supported in formulating their own research questions, designing a methodology, conducting ethnographic research, and writing up their findings in a final report. The course develops students' ability to apply their theoretical knowledge of research methodology to a specific research project.
