Course Description
This is a reading, writing, and discussion-intensive course that examines the development of modern Korea in the context of imperialism and capitalism. Using a combination of lecture and class discussion, we examine the facts and arguments surrounding the transitions from Chosun Korea to colonial Korea to the postwar divisions of North and South Korea. We pay special attention to the dominant arguments surrounding key moments of historical debate in modern Korean history. World History: Group II courses focus on in-depth and contextual understanding of certain transformative historical moments. By taking a multi-dimensional approach to understanding a particular event or an era, students learn how various forces and interests coalesced into creating a momentous transformation in the history of humankind.
