Course Description
This course is concerned with various aspects of deviant and criminal behavior among young people and our responses to those behaviors. The course examines the social construction of youth and their control, particularly the law and criminal justice system as modes of social control. The course considers theories of crime specifically in relation to youth, the extent of youth crime and deviance, and various issues related to specific groups of young people often labelled as deviant. The course draws on contemporary Australian and international research, and current issues and debates in juvenile justice.
