Course Description
After introducing the scope of health psychology, this course explores the biopsychosocial and lifespan perspectives to the maintenance of health and prevention of disease. The course introduces participants to the dominant theories, models, and paradigms current in the field. The influence of some of the broad domains of psychology (developmental, social, individual differences, biological) on health are explored, and how these shape and inform the practice of public health, health promotion, and approaches to addressing the social disparities in health.
