Course Description
This course discusses theoretical tools to understand the contemporary world from a cultural perspective. After an introduction to Cultural Anthropology, the course examines the processes of globalization. This course covers various themes and problems in the world, in particular the problems that resulted from dynamic relations between tradition and modernity, relations between local and global, and the tension between centers and margins. This course analyzes the policies of identity as well as the role of cultural symbols. The course also explores topics including cultural and social anthropology, the anthropological research and its theoretical and methodological foundations, the anthropological concept of culture, anthropology of the contemporary, the cultural dimensions of globalization, disjuncture and difference in the Global Cultural Economy, and the Anthropology of Development. Students complete an oral final exam. There are two versions of this course, one taught in Italian and one taught in English. This is the English taught course.
