Course Description
This course introduces the theory and practice of community development (i.e., engagement of communities and becoming empowered agents of social change). The community development models and frameworks discussed include asset-based community development; community capitals framework; networking approach to community development; community empowerment models; sustainable livelihoods models; and radical community development. Students develop competencies in applying qualitative research techniques that can be used to map communities. The course also examines community participation, consensus building and design thinking techniques that can be adopted to generate solutions to community issues. Through community mapping activities, students engage in experiential learning. They are challenged to engage community members and stakeholders, and through these engagements, draw deep insights into various community issues in Singapore.
