Course Description

This course is about travel and cultural encounters, the ways in which these experiences are recorded, and the exploration of the significance of such records through a journey around Trinity Library collections and students' own personal memories. The course introduces students to the methodologies applied to the analysis of travel writing in its various forms (e.g. historical narratives, autobiographical memoirs, travel fiction) and to the analysis of visual and material objects. Primary material are drawn, where possible, from the Library’s collections of remarkable texts and objects from around the world. Students engage with appropriately selected items available for viewing in person or in digital form on the Trinity Digital Collections website.
