Course Description
Fundamental importance is assigned to speakers' introspective judgments of sentence acceptability in syntactic research. However, such judgments can be gravely compromised by instability of different kinds, which calls into question the empirical reliability of such data. This course presents objective and practical methods to collect and analyze acceptability judgments. Topics include experimental design, data visualization, statistical analysis, and the application of experimental methods to theoretical questions. This is a hands-on course, and students are expected to lead discussions on primary research.
