Course Description
This course addresses the ethnographic richness, complexity, and vitality of Islam as a lived experience, as a formal religious tradition, and as a political outlook. Drawing on ethnographies of Islam in Africa, the Middle East, Asia, and Europe, the course traces the role Islam plays in contemporary politics, gender relations, beliefs and practices, migration and diaspora, and others. In doing this, it introduces students to the main theoretical and methodological debates within the anthropology of Islam regarding how best to study Muslim lives.
