Course Description
As the Chinese economy grows, China has transformed itself from a traditional aid recipient from international organization to an emerging donor. President Xi Jinping coined the strategy "One Belt One Road" during his visit to Kazakhstan and Indonesia and called for the establishment of the Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank which is in the making. Another New Development Bank, espoused by Chinese government, has already opened its office in Shanghai. As a major funding sources of these new international development banks, China needs more talents that are suited to work in international organizations. The purpose of this course is three fold: to introduce the theories and histories of international organizations; to introduce basic management tools in international organization; and to create competent and innovative professionals and leaders of international organizations.
