Course Description
This course explores the reception of Classical Greece from the post-classical period to the 21st century. The course surveys changing perceptions of the ancient world through a variety of political uses of ancient Greece, or artistic and literary responses in subsequent historical periods within the geographical and linguistic realm of Greece. The course introduces students to the important topic of reception history as well as to materials and methodologies that are necessary for the study of ancient, Byzantine, and Modern Greek history, including literary and material evidence.
