Course Description
This course provides an introduction to the purpose and techniques of qualitative research methods. The main topics cover the major steps of a complete research process, from formulating a research question, conceptualizing a problem, to writing a research report. The course covers the foundations of qualitative research, the relationship between theory and evidence, how to design research, and how to collect and analyze qualitative data. In discussing various kinds of qualitative research methods, the ethical implications of social research are also considered. Classical and contemporary studies in sociology are used as examples to illustrate the issues involved in social research.
