Course Description

This course offers students the opportunity to engage with art thinking and art practice. It proposes a collective and experimental space based on the individual projects of each student. Students learn, explore, and practice arts processes and develop a personal art project. This course provides an experience in interdisciplinary thinking. It calls on a wide-ranging set of materials from art, anthropology, architecture, philosophy, biology, physics, mathematics, neurology, and geology and introduce students to the work of some thinkers and practitioners working in those areas.
