Course Description

This seminar examines the politics of contemporary Latin American immigrants in the United States, with a focus on their transnational political activity. The first part of the seminar provides an overview of the theories that help facilitate mobility in the United States. The course considers the factors that encourage or hinder the participants of immigrants in the US political system. The final part of the course delves into case study of key Latinx groups: why and how they become politically involved in homeland issues, what strategies they use to shape US policy towards their home company, and what branches of government are targeted and why.
