Course Description
This course delves deeply into some of the central themes in Metaphysics and the Philosophy of Mind. There are two variants, each focusing on a set of core issues within these areas. One variant concentrates on the marks of the mental and, among other things, focuses on different approaches to the question of the various kind of mental content, including sensory qualities and the contents of thought and other propositional attitudes. Another variant focuses on what kind of theory we can have of the nature of consciousness, how consciousness can exist in the physical world, and how various philosophical views of consciousness are related to the different approaches of the special sciences.
