Course Description
This course considers a variety of contemporary philosophical and psychological responses to the question of: What are emotions? It begins by examining the most prominent theories about the composition of emotions: are they feelings? Judgments? Perceptions? Then, it moves on to questions about the significance of emotions for human life, with a particular focus on their relation to rationality. Is there such a thing as emotional rationality? How do emotions contribute to and/or interfere with our epistemic capacities? Finally, the course addresses some special topics: empathy, emotion and fiction, and the moral significance of emotional lives.
