Course Description

This course addresses a variety of questions that are relevant in macroeconomics and for our current understanding of the global economy. Students cover five topics chosen in the following (non-exhaustive) list: the very long run and demographics, business cycles, hyperinflation, the liquidity trap, income and wealth inequalities, sustainable development and Easter Island economics, and Market Economy vs Planned Economy and USSR economic development. In this course, students develop their appreciation of the value of macroeconomic theory and mathematical modelling for the understanding of historical and current economic issues.
