Course Description
This course explores the relationship between theater and politics, focusing on theater and performance events that are rooted in the explicit exploration of political issues. Case studies span historical periods and include suffrage parades, Brecht and political play-writing, workers theater, agitprop, Welfare State International, sit-ins, the Occupy movement, and contemporary approaches to political theater. This course considers these examples in detailed social and historical context, with focus on political, national, local, and cultural identities.
