Course Description

This course introduces an area of research exploring how nature influences the psyche. It provides a broad and representative overview by examining empirical research and theories from natural science, humanities, and social science. Topics include evolutionary psychology and biophilia, the Connectedness to Nature Scale, nature and cognition, Arne Næss' deep ecology, Getnot Böhme's Weather phenomenology, Preben Bertelsen's life skills, Margarete Archer's agency theory, Hartmut Rosa's concept of resonance in nature and how nature fits in critical theory, and biophobia. The course involves excursions to facilitate discussion about clinical effects of nature interventions. Assessment is based on an individual or group written assignment of 12-18 pages.
