Course Description
This course addresses the social and economic history of the Southeast Asian region since the mid-18th century. It introduces the study of social and economic change across time, the perspectives useful in and resultant from that study, and the particular value of that study in understanding modern Southeast Asia. It examines pre-colonial social formations and their relationship to patterns of economic activity; Southeast Asians' responses to the challenges and opportunities of their region's integration with new markets in the 19th century; the social transformations that followed from depression, war, and decolonization in the mid-20th century; and significant aspects of the rapid pace of social and economic change that marked the second half of that century.
