Course Description

The course offers the opportunity to explore traditional Chinese medicine through a survey of Chinese medical culture in its dynamic formation and transformation. The first half of the course provides a historical overview of Chinese medicine shaped by philosophy, natural science, religion, while influenced by political and social forces for 2,000 years. The second half provides a study of the theoretical foundation and practical aspects of Chinese medicine, which is opened to influence from western medicine and impact from modernity. The course examines the globalization of Chinese medicine, focusing on transregional connections and cultural negotiations with the world.
